Our question

Can the patenting behaviour surrounding historically ground breaking products be used to identify ground breaking, disruptive or emerging technologies?

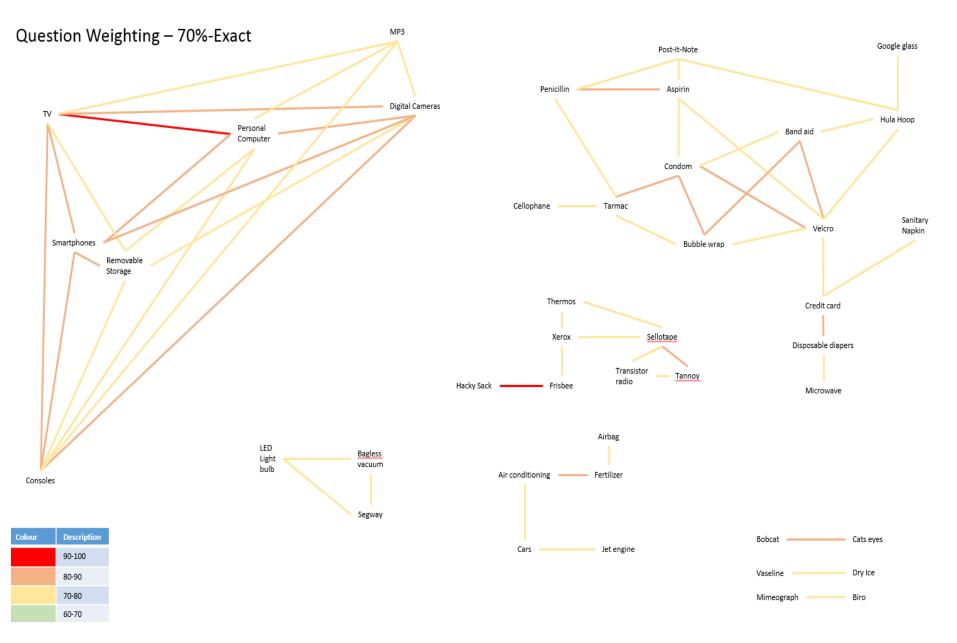

The ground breaking products

Back stories

Discovery rather than invention	One main player	Few improvements on ground breaker	Mainly generic products	Individual developed
Invention rather than discovery	Industry with a small number of big players	A number of generations following ground breaker	Some generic followers	Firm developed
Main players have changed over time	Industry with a large number of players	and then minimal improvements	No generic followers	Tech worked on and developed by separate companies
Main players are the same over time	Ground breaker internationally developed	Still regular new generations	Notable time between original tech invention	Ground breaking product purchased by a
Main players have been added to over time	Ground breaker nationally developed	A number of iterations before take off	and ground breaking product	larger firm

Next steps

1. Identify variables synonymous within the ground breaking technology groups

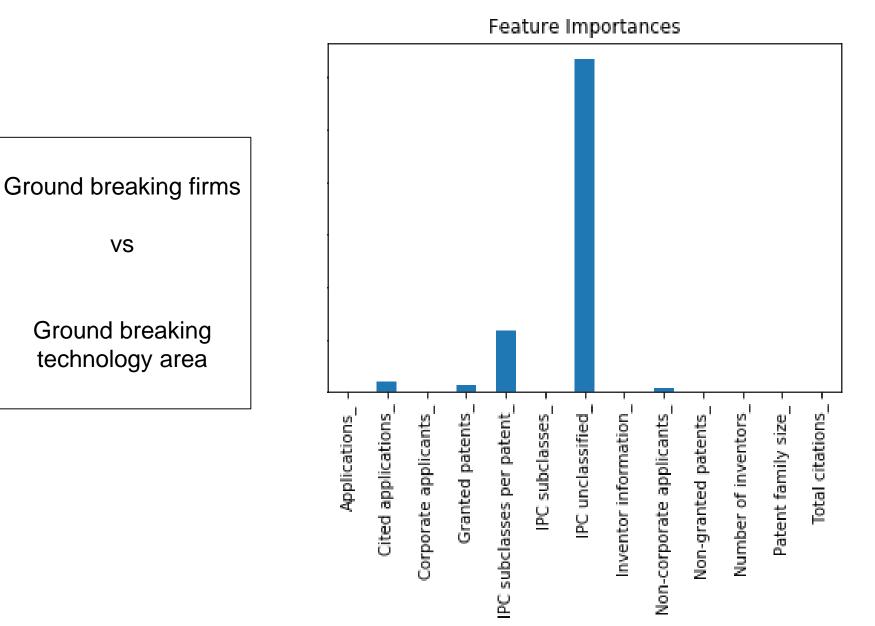

2. Group patent data into technology groups and search for patterns like those synonymous with ground breaking technology groups
